The new Smith Campus Center at Harvard University is a building that, like a lot of good architecture, can be read in different ways. You can say Smith is a story about concrete and how we love it, hate it, and sometimes restore it to health when it's old and sick. Or you can say Smith is a veryHistory. The idea for the foundation was made in 1968 by Joan Miró. Miró formed the foundation with his friend Joan Prats. Miró wanted to create a new building that would encourage particularly younger artists to experiment with contemporary art.⁸
