The present volume brings other mothers, from Asia and the Pacific, into scholarly view, aiming to show that birthing and mothering can be a very different experience for women in other parts of the world. Their analyses provide insights into how the maternal body served as a site from which colonial and missionary modernization projects were launched. Postcolonial Experiences in Asia and the Pacific. These "interventions in mothering" (p. 5), as Kalpana Ram and Margaret Jolly, eds. New Jolly refers to them, occurred through British York: Cambridge ...
