Acupuncture is the insertion of needles into the skin at specific points in order to affect the flow of energy. Although acupuncture is the practice most often associated with Traditional Chinese Medicine, it is not limited to the Chinese culture. Medicinal plants, also called medicinal herbs, have been discovered and used in traditional medicine practices since prehistoric times. Plants synthesise hundreds of chemical compounds for functions including defence against insects, fungi, diseases, and herbivorous mammals. Understanding the Past By Professor Wang Jin-Huai. The emergence of disease follows the emergence of life. From the beginnings of humankind there have been invasions by disease, thus from those earliest times humans have been groping for ways to overcome illness.
